FIRST AMERICAS REGIONAL CONFERENCE ON THE ILLEGAL TRADE IN WILDLIFE

Lima, 3 and 4 October 2019

CONCEPT NOTE

1. Introduction

During the London Conference on Illegal Wildlife Trade, held on 11-12 October 2018, Peru reaffirmed, along with more than 70 countries, its commitment to combat illegal wildlife trade, and adhered to the London Declaration 2018. The Declaration emphasizes the importance of:

- Work in collective actions, in regional and international collaboration.
- Recognize that this problem impacts not only species and ecosystems, but also indigenous peoples and local populations.
- Recognize and treat the illegal wildlife trade as a serious and organized crime.
- Take measures to reduce demand for wildlife products.

As part of the London Conference, the Meeting of the Americas was held on 10 October 2018, with the participation of representatives from Argentina, Belize, Bolivia, Canada, Colombia, Costa Rica, Ecuador, Guatemala, Mexico, Nicaragua, Panama, Peru, as well as the United States and the United Kingdom.

At that meeting, the participating countries recognized that illegal wildlife trade is a serious problem in the Americas and that it must be treated as a serious and organized crime that affects the economy, security, indigenous peoples and the ecosystem of the region. It was also decided to work together to combat illegal trade in flora and fauna, as well as poaching on a regional and international scale. At the end of the meeting, Peru announced that it will host the First Regional Conference of the Americas on Illegal Wildlife Trade, which will be held in the city of Lima on 3 and 4 October 2019, based on the work done in London.

One of the greatest threats to the global conservation of biological diversity is the growing illegal trade in wildlife (wild flora and fauna), which has a direct impact on biodiversity conservation, species survival, the state of ecosystems and the livelihoods of people engaged in legal trade. Its environmental, economic and social consequences may be irreversible in the countries where it occurs. Also, illegal wildlife trade is a latent problem in Peru, whose identified purposes are: (i) intended for private collectors and zoos, (ii) scientific purposes and biomedical industry, (iii) international marketing in pet shops, (iv) leather, skins and fiber industry from the illegal market, and, (v) others such as sport hunting, traditional medicine.

In view of the foregoing, the First Regional Conference of the Americas on Illegal Wildlife Trade would mark a milestone from which efforts in the region can be unified in the region in order to confront this illicit trade. Therefore, the participation of high level delegates (ministerial) is of the utmost importance.

It therefore includes emerging issues today such as the strengthening and harmonization of legal frameworks and their enforcement; controls and regulations on wildlife trade; use of new technologies to combat illegal wildlife trade; and demand reduction through innovative and efficient communication mechanisms.

PRIMERA CONFERENCIA REGIONAL DE LAS AMÉRICAS SOBRE EL COMERCIO ILEGAL DE VIDA SILVESTRE

Lima, 3 y 4 de octubre de 2019

NOTA CONCEPTUAL

1. Introducción

Durante la Conferencia de Londres sobre comercio ilegal de Vida Silvestre , llevada a cabo el 11 y 12 de octubre de 2018, el Perú reafirmó, junto con más de 70 países, su compromiso de combatir el comercio ilegal de vida silvestre, y se adhirió a la Declaración de Londres 2018. Dicha Declaración enfatiza la importancia de:

- Trabajar acciones colectivas, en colaboración regional e internacional.
- Reconocer que este problema impacta no solo a las especies y a los ecosistemas, sino también a los pueblos indígenas y poblaciones locales.
- Reconocer y tratar el comercio ilegal de vida silvestre como un delito grave y organizado.
- Tomar medidas para reducir la demanda de productos de vida silvestre.

Como parte de la Conferencia de Londres, se realizó la Reunión de las Américas, el 10 de octubre de 2018, en la que participaron representantes de Argentina, Belice, Bolivia, Canadá, Colombia, Costa Rica, Ecuador, Guatemala, México, Nicaragua, Panamá, Perú, así como de los Estados Unidos y del Reino Unido.

En dicha reunión, los países participantes reconocieron que el comercio ilegal de vida silvestre es un grave problema en las Américas y que debe ser tratado como un crimen grave y organizado que afecta la economía, la seguridad, a los pueblos indígenas y al ecosistema de la región. Asimismo, se decidió trabajar de manera conjunta para combatir el comercio ilegal de flora y fauna, así como la caza furtiva a una escala regional e internacional. Al final de la reunión, el Perú anunció que albergará la Primera Conferencia Regional de las Américas sobre Comercio Ilegal de Vida Silvestre, la cual se realizará en la ciudad de Lima, los días 03 y 04 de octubre de 2019, sobre la base del trabajo realizado en Londres.

Una de las mayores amenazas para la conservación global de la diversidad biológica es el creciente comercio ilícito de vida silvestre (flora y fauna silvestre), la misma que impacta directamente sobre la conservación de la biodiversidad, la supervivencia de las especies, el estado de los ecosistemas y los medios de subsistencia de la población dedicada al comercio legal. Sus consecuencias ambientales, económicas y sociales pueden ser irreversibles en los países donde ocurre. Asimismo, el comercio ilegal de vida silvestre es un problema latente en el Perú, cuyas finalidades identificadas son: (i) ser destinados a coleccionistas particulares y zoológicos, (ii) fines científicos e industria biomédica, (iii) comercialización internacional en tiendas de mascotas, (iv) industria de cuero, pieles y fibra provenientes del mercado ilegal, y, (v) otras como caza deportiva, medicina tradicional.

En mérito a lo expuesto, la Primera Conferencia Regional de las Américas sobre el Comercio Ilegal de Vida Silvestre, marcaría un hito a partir del cual se podrán unificar esfuerzos en la región a fin
